

I am appealing your potential ruling on the Indiana law against telemarketers. I do not want to take anyone's freedom away but the telemarketers took away my freedom almost every night. The freedom to have a peaceful meal or relaxing evening. The most frustrating part was that most of the time, there was no one on the line because they did not have an open operator. Since we have signed up with the state, we have had the freedom to have who we want to call us and not rely on their agenda. Even people who do business with us, do not have the right to call us when they want to sell us something that we do not want. If we do business with them, they have our address and can mail something to us that we can read at our convenience. That is our right. I see no reason to allow people to change our right just because they have lost sales and some people do not have the willpower to resist these phone calls.
